There are two subspecies of emperor tamarins, and both are endangered in the wild. One subspecies, S. emperador, is found in Paraguayan rainforests, while the other, S. emperador, is found in Bolivian rainforests.

In the early 1950s, the Santa Ana Zoo was called “The oldest zoo without any animals.” In those days, everyone called the Zoo “The Zoo” and the animals were the people. The Zoo was open to everyone, and the only thing that separated the people from the animals was a fence.

Farewell to the Santa Ana Zoo by Ron Glazier

A rain cloud lingered in the middle of the Santa Ana Zoo last week. The sun was bright but the dark clouds had their own charming effect. On this beautiful day, the zoo was a beacon for many, with its vibrant colors and unique features.

The zoo's关闭 has been a source of sadness for many. However, this is also an opportunity for change and growth, as the zoo moves towards a new future. The zoo has made significant contributions to the community, and its legacy will continue to inspire for years to come.
