Invisible Work by Kent Yamaguchi, Zoo Director

Much of what we do at the Zoo is done so you never see it. It is the bread and butter, the invisible work that makes the Zoo a success. The work that never gets noticed, the work that makes the Zoo grind to a halt if it stops. You never see the hours of cleaning it needs to be completed day after day done so that you never see it. It’s this very unglamorous job, but is essential to our success.

We especially want to invite you to a time sensitive material that will be easier to clean, meet vital project by attending Zoofari, or donating the money to the Zoo.

Betty Tobey Tribute by Kent Yamaguchi
Betty Tobey passed away in March. If you never saw Betty, you have seen her handiwork in the Zoo the past 25 years. Betty was one of the original keepers at the Zoo in 1973, and she was there through its growth and development. Betty and Bob Tobey served as the Zoo's first volunteer docents. Betty was one of the education animals while Bob assisted with the garden. Betty was known for her dedication and love for nature. She was a true friend and a great asset to the Zoo.
